Minutes to Hours After

Minutes after an event, television, radio, and Internet news sites report the basic facts of the event. Since information is reported as the event happens, facts may not be accurate or verified.

Hours after an event, public opinion begins to circulate in the media, creating discussion and debate.

Within these sources, you will find basic information; who, what, where, when, how; and interviews with the public.